Problem Statement

Young adults often don't know their drinking tolerance. Coming into a new environment and not being familiar with how much you can drink without going too far is a big problem. People end up drinking way too much and end up throwing up, or even in the hospital. Our solution should provide users with a way to easily track how much they have drank and how much they can drink without going too far.

Who is experiencing this problem?
Young adults or any other age group that need to track their drinking habits.

What is the problem?
Many people don't know how many drinks they can handle and lose count of how many they have had throughout the night which could become dangerous to them.

Where does the problem present itself?
It typically presents itself when going out and drinking with friends.

Why does it matter?
People tend to drink more than they can handle and embarrass themselves or put themselves in harmful situations. It's important to be safe and not wake up with regret in the morning.
